Mentor Performing Arts Theater

The TEXAS Tenors — John Hagen, JC Fisher and Marcus Collins — formed in 2009 in order to audition for the television show “America’s Got Talent”. They ended up placing fourth in the competition.

With their unique blend of classical, country, gospel, Broadway and pop, The TEXAS Tenors had no idea people would respond so positively to their sound. “Country fans leave our shows with an appreciation of classical music, and classical fans gain an appreciation of country,” Collins said.

Each of them are classically trained singers, so they knew how to blend their voices together and make a sound that has obviously worked. “John was more focused on opera and classical, and he has grown as a pop singer,” The Tenors have all learned from each other.

The TEXAS Tenors show is a mix of styles that appeals to everyone. The name, The Texas Tenors, sometimes makes some people think they are “all yee haw music” or all classical music because of the Tenors reference, but they are a combination of many styles. Since their appearance on “America’s Got Talent,” their careers have exploded.

With breathtaking vocals, humor and cowboy charm The TEXAS Tenors have traveled the globe performing more than 500 concerts in the last four years.

Marcus was born in a small town and began to sing at the age of 4. He first learned how to sing by emulating his favorite artists such as George Michael and Rascal Flatts before training classically in college

JC has entertained audiences around the world for the past 15 years. In high school, he had a passion for sports and also enjoyed singing in church. He discovered a deeper love of singing at Wichita State University where he earned his Bachelor’s Degree in Music

John has been described as “astonishing, a superb tenor of deep musicality” making his debut at Lincoln Center, New York City. Mr. Hagen created 3 tenor roles in The world premiere of The Lost Dauphane for Pamiro Opera airing on PBS.
